What is 0x Protocol (ZRX)?

ZRX is the governance token for the 0x infrastructure protocol that allows the trading of ERC-20 tokens and other assets on the Ethereum blockchain without intermediaries like the traditional centralized cryptocurrency exchanges. Thus the trading of Ethereum tokens becomes cheap and can be done directly from the wallet.

0x uses open-source, publicly audited smart contracts that work together to provide decentralized exchange functionality. Those smart contracts produce a flexible, low-friction trading protocol that can be easily used by the developers of other projects. The code for the token executing swapping is shared on the 0x main page.

0x was launched in 2017 by 0x Labs — the organization that developed a Decentralized exchange protocol with the infrastructure to support the global exchange of tokenized assets and create the ecosystem for numerous p2p transfers.

According to the project team, the main aspect of the project's infrastructure is the improvement and management of the liquidity sourcing. For this goal, they created an application programming interface (API). 0x API is considered a liquidity solution for DEXs and other platforms, including Ethereum, Binance, and Polygon.

To step out from the numerous DeFi projects 0x focuses on the tools that are helpful for the broader ecosystem development, including the tool for the liquidity aggregation and also the feature called Matcha that works as a search engine for trading on DEXs. Thus the users of 0x get access to the simplified trading process, compared to the other DEXs. Moreover, 0x protocol supports both ERC-20 and ERC-723 tokens.

After the version 3 update in 2019 staking capability became available for the users, allowing them to receive the token as a reward.

ZRX token powers the ecosystem, and is also used to pay the transaction fees on the platform. Those fees are used to incentivize the market maker's liquidity. Nodes host an off-chain order book and offer the applications that present the data needed to perform the transactions paid in ZRX.

Is ZRX a Good Investment?

0x (ZRX) is quite volatile, as is the case with many cryptocurrencies. Due to its history of high volatility, investing in it is fraught with peril. Should you not invest, though, because of this? In a word, no. You need to time your purchases and sales wisely to prevent losing money.

In the introduction, we said bluntly that there are real benefits to holding 0x (ZRX). The 0x protocol, for instance, is unique and particularly helpful across a wide array of DeFi applications. It can become a big tool for DeFi traders and those who are interested in all kinds of fungible and non-fungible tokens (NFT). The local currency (ZRX) will gain a lot of value once this occurs.

Although 0x (ZRX) may prove profitable in the long run, investors should proceed with caution for now. Our research suggests that the value of this cryptocurrency may not increase as quickly as would be ideal for most investors. Considering how difficult it has been for it to recover to its level from five years ago, it is not a good investment. It's an asset with mediocre returns, at best.

Will ZRX Hit $10?

The ZRX token's price would need to increase by approximately 37 times from its current level to reach $10.

Additionally, the ZRX token peaked in value at $2.3 in April 2021, representing a rise of nearly 5.75 times in just six months (from a low point of $0.4 in October 2020).

Taking into account its 0.95-fold monthly growth rate, the ZRX token would need approximately 38.94 months (more than 3 years) to achieve a price of $10. However, the market and economic aspects could make the process considerably lengthier.

As a result, the ZRX token's goal of $10 is a lofty one.
