What is Flow (FLOW)?

Flow is an efficient and decentralized blockchain platform that is also user- and programmer-friendly. It's the backbone of the digital economy that will power the next generation of games, apps, and virtual goods.

Flow was created by a group who had previously worked on projects including CryptoKitties, Dapper Wallet, and NBA Top Shot, all of which are consumer-facing blockchain applications. Unlike any other blockchain, Flow's protocol layer explicitly includes usability improvements made with wide-scale adoption in mind.

Flow is an initiative of Dapper Labs, a Vancouver-based blockchain technology firm formed by CEO Roham Gharegozlou and CTO Dieter Shirley. Flow is part of a thriving ecosystem that includes major media companies, game studios, and VC-backed startups.

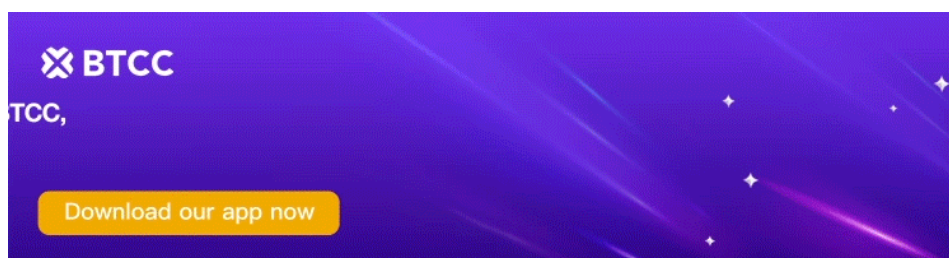

Warner Music, Ubisoft, the National Basketball Association (NBA), and the Ultimate Fighting Championship (UFC) are just a few of the global IP powerhouses that participate as ecosystem partners. Many well-known gaming studios are now part of the Flow family, including Animoca Brands, Sumo Digital, and nWay. The Flow ecosystem includes prominent crypto companies like Circle and Binance, as well as prospective high-growth firms like Opensea.

The native token in Flow is FLOW, and it has many uses. Transaction and smart contract computation fees on the network are paid with it. It's also possible to buy, sell, and invest in FLOW.

Flow uses a PoS consensus technique, in which validators aid in maintaining the network's safety and authenticity by staking FLOW tokens. Selected validators receive freshly mined FLOW tokens in exchange for the amount of FLOW they have staked.
