What is NYT Connections?

The New York Times, creators of the indefatigable Wordle problem, release a new word puzzle game called Connections daily. Daily, crossword puzzle creator Wyna Liu gives you 16 random words and asks you to put them in four groups of four, with a similar theme for each set. The goal of the game is to form connections between the words.

Consider the following: “Hook,” “Nana,” “Peter,” and “Wendy”—all of which are Peter Pan characters. Alternatively, “Action,” “Ballpark,” “Go,” and “Stick” are all terms that frequently appear before “Figure.”

Discovering the underlying ideas that link the phrases is your task, but watch out for red herring connections—intentionally put there to confuse you! Locate all four Connections without committing any of the game’s four fatal errors in order to claim victory. The game ends and the solution is shown mechanically after your fourth error.

Additionally, the Connection’s difficulty is denoted by the color assigned to each of the four groups in the daily Connections puzzle. Here are the colors: yellow for the easiest, green for medium, blue for medium-hard, and purple for hardest.

How To Play Connections?

A grid of sixteen words is displayed to you in Connections. Your mission is to find the connections between them and sort them into four sets of four. Examples of possible categories include horror film series, verbs, and rap groups.

Each puzzle has a single correct answer, so you'll have to be selective when using terms that could be in more than one category. If you're having trouble seeing connections between the words, try shuffling them around.

The categories are color-coded. In most cases, the yellow group is the simplest to derive, followed by the green and blue groups, and finally, the purple group is the most elusive. Wordplay is common in the purple group, so keep that in mind.

Input the four words you believe go together and hit the Submit button. There will be casualties if your prediction is wrong. If you're almost there with the right group, you can get a notification saying it's just one word away, but you still have to choose which one to exchange.

The game ends if you commit four errors. With the use of some pointers and, if you're truly having trouble, today's Connections solutions, we can make sure that doesn't happen.
